Preparing Your Child for Adolescence

➤ “Enjoy ‘em now, because they’ll drive you crazy when they’re teenagers!” That’s the warning parents of preteens often hear. Obviously, you and your preteen are in for a lot of change, but turmoil isn’t inevitable. You have the opportunity – before the transition from childhood to adulthood begins – to intentionally navigate your son or daughter through that change in a proactive and positive way.

The best way to prepare your child for adolescence is for you to set the stage by spending time together dedicated to giving your preadolescent the framework for what’s coming. The hope is that you – the parent – will explain what it means and how to make the most of this vital time in life.

When

Often parents are concerned that they will overwhelm their preteen or encourage premature curiosity if they jump the gun in preparing them for adolescence. A greater concern, however, is the likelihood that someone else will beat you to it. Children are typically ready before their parents are. Doctors report puberty starting as early as age 9 among some girls, and the average age for first exposure to pornography among boys is around the same age. Of course, not all children are the same. That is why it’s important to spend time with your preteen, getting a sense of where they are developmentally and to make the timing of your conversations a matter of prayer. Generally, your prime opportunity will fall somewhere between the ages of 9 and 12.

What

In your conversation about the years ahead, you should plan to address the many areas of change your son or daughter will encounter in transitioning to adulthood – in body, in decision-making, and in his or her relationship with you.

- Body: It’s important to frame the physical changes ahead as much more than a plea for sexual abstinence. Your child needs a vision for how the internal and external changes ahead are preparing them for the joys of marriage and the miracle of creating new life.
- Decision-making: Increasingly, your child will have to make and assume the responsibilities for his or her decisions. As you maintain your overall family values in media choices, individual responsibilities (chores, homework, etc.) and alcohol/drug use, you also need to direct your son or daughter in how to make good decisions for himself or herself. The first nine chapters of the book of Proverbs can be a helpful guide for learning to discern between wisdom and folly.
- Relationship to You: Helping your son or daughter understand and embrace the changes in his or her body while challenging him or her to bear the responsibility of decision-making will be different from the role you’ve played before. Explain to your preteen that over the next decade, your role will be progressively changing to that of a coach who is there to guide him or her in transitioning to independent development.

How Here are a few ideas to get you started:

- Schedule It: Set aside a special time or trip with your child to go through one of the recommended resources for joint discussion. Think about how to create an environment for open communication for your child to share, talk, and discuss with you.
- Prepare for It: Listen to the audio titled “The Talk” included with the Faith Path: Preparing for Adolescence kit for examples of what to say.
- Dialogue: Don’t do all the talking. Allow your child to share thoughts and questions; and don’t be judgmental or quick to give a lecture.
- Have Fun: Your child is much more likely to listen and be open with you if you have established a good relationship by creating fun times.
